

Political Uncertainty and the Future of International Business in Latin America

8th Annual AIB-LAT Conference – March 8–10, 2018 Buenos Aires, Argentina

While Latin America has seen a wide divergence in political systems over the past few decades, the impact of recent political changes in both Europe and the United States has created a compound effect where political uncertainty is occurring both within the region and externally in what previously were relatively stable external developed country environments. This has created a situation where multinationals and foreign multinationals operating in Latin America must adapt to new political contexts. However, this also creates opportunities for new governments to gain credibility against a backdrop of divergent past regimes and corruption scandals, as well as for firms to develop and utilize specific capabilities needed to thrive in such environments. In this setting, questions remain regarding whether multinationals or foreign MNCs will be better at navigating this uncertainty, what factors allow firms to succeed under these conditions, and how will this impact the overall growth of international business in the region.

To address these and other related issues, the Latin American Chapter of the Academy of International Business (AIB-LAT) announces its 8th Annual conference “Political Uncertainty and the Future of International Business in Latin America”, to be held in Buenos Aires, Argentina at IAE Business School of Austral University from March 8-10, 2018.

We cordially invite you to submit papers related to the theme of the conference. Papers more broadly based on international business and Latin America will also be welcomed. The review of manuscripts for the conference will be led by Program Chair Armando Borda (ESAN), with support from the track chairs listed below:

- Political Uncertainty and International Business: Gerald McDermott (USC, USA; IAE-Austral, Argentina)
